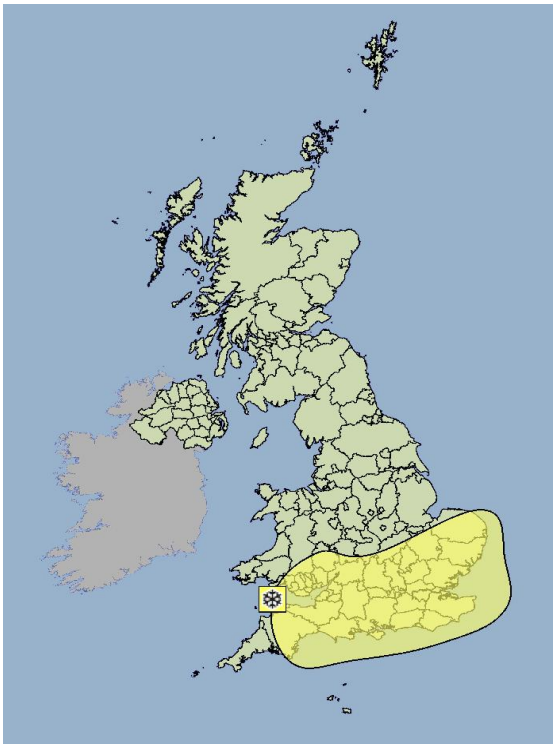
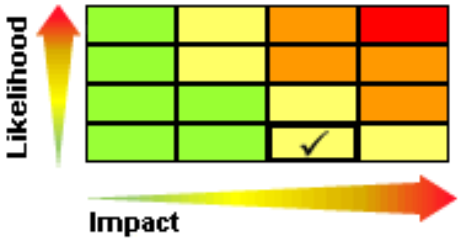
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
If the area of heavy rain moves further north, this would pull cold air into the system and bring snow to parts of southern England and south Wales. At the same time heavy rain will likely persist in some areas along with the potential for some locally strong winds.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 10:00 on Thu, 12th Jan 2017 until 21:00 on Thu, 12th Jan 2017

Rain moving eastwards across the south of the UK on Thursday may turn to snow in places.

Whilst this is unlikely, there is a small chance of snow settling with disruption to road, rail and air services as well as interruptions to power supplies and other utilities. Associated heavy rain and strong winds may prove additional hazards.
